WRITERS' TRAINING PROGRAM

What Is The YKA Writer's Training Program?

Completely free, the 3-week training is a platform for youth from Dalit-Adivasi communities to take charge of the narrative around issues like higher education and manual scavenging, and to challenge the mainstream media's coverage, and move it further from just problems to solutions.

This is a unique opportunity to bring about change that matters—through storytelling and journalism. A computer, an internet connection, and a passion for research and writing are our only requirements.

Since 2010, Youth Ki Awaaz's award-winning, work-from-home online journalism training program has coached over 2,500 participants, and has become one of the most coveted training in the country.

What The Program Covers

From honing writing and communication skills and the basics of Mobile Journalism, to utilising social media, the program is a comprehensive learning process that aids and abets your issue-based writing and expression needs.

How The Program Works

In the course of the program, you will be expected to work on 8 content pieces, and these can be videos and/or articles!

We will work together on two content pitches each week, and the process will include intensive feedback sessions with your mentors at YKA.

The program also includes weekly workshops on:

- How to write to create impact.
- Leveraging social media to create an impact.
- Mastering the basics of mobile journalism and video-making.

How To Apply

To apply for the training, please visit www.youthkiawaaz.com/internships/ and fill out the application form. Be patient as sorting out applications takes time.

The training requires significant time commitment (min. 2 hours a day) and works on tight deadlines. Please make sure you can make this commitment before you apply.
